Re Section V

Both GB2134045A and WO85/02012A show a print head comprising a rotatable print array with print valves. From figure 5 of GB2134045A (positions "0","1","2","3","4","5") and from page 17 line 11 to page18 line 10 of WO85/02012A (3/4-height, ½-height), it can be concluded that these documents propose a limited and fixed number of possible rotational orientations for printing. These documents appear to imply the features of the preamble of claim 1.

The problem of allowing maximum rotational adjustment possibilities is solved by reading the print data subelements from the memory locations for each sub-sequent time period for each drive pulse.

No available document shows this solution to solve this problem. US4567570A shows a comparable solution but for a head with a constant slant angle.

Therefore claim 1, and likewise independent claim 3 and dependent claims 2 and 4, are considered to meet the requirements of Art 33 PCT.
